With advent of spring (we hope) comes the usual influx of transient peddlers. And each year about this time we publish a warning to beware of this annual epidemic which, in spite of all warning and previous unsatisfactory results, exacts a lot of local money. While strict tire rationing and absorbtion of former peddlers in defense communities where more sales are assured, we can still expect our annual quota. This year, let's make it a set rule to pass up these "bargains" and whenever possible do our buying from local merchants. In the long run you will be far ahead.

We can't pass up this opportunity of calling your attention to the condition of the main street now that most of the snow has departed and left its winter collection of debris Bones which dogs hopefully buried in the snow during the fall and winter are now much in evidence, even bottles, deposited on snow banks during the winter to break and scatter are found among the unsightly old papers, bags, bones and what-have you. We wouldn't call this condition to your attention if it constituted an unsurmountable problem, but it doesn't and a little concerted effort would correct it in fast order.

Unjust criticism and baseless gossi can cause, and often does, irreparable damage. Particularly at this time, a close personal censorship should be maintained and a thought should be carried always that once an evil bi' of gossip or unfair criticism is voiced it can't be recalled but too often gains such headway and growth that i ends in serious damage to the subject Constructive criticism is always acceptable, or at least should be, and facts, in our opinion, should be voiced as freely as we desire, but gossip i a dangerous habit and should be avoided regardless of our desire to pass on something which we migh like to believe.

The sheriff, in instituting his rifl deputies, is to be commended most highly. The organization ha a function most important to civilian welfare and should be endorsed by every loyal citizen. However, it should be taken as a serious business and its objects handled in a serious manner under careful and efficient administration and not permitted to be kicked around like a game. It can well mean life or death and should have that meaning to its members and executives.

Last Rites Are Held For Mrs. Thibault, Ex-Hobart Woman

Other Deaths in Family Contribute To Decease of Former Local Woman.

The funeral of Mrs. Julia Marie Thibault at Sacramento on Friday Feb. 27, was attended by many former residents of Hobart Mills. Mrs. Theibault was one of the earliest residents of the well-known lumber town and was the wife of the late Patrick Thibault. She was the mother of Ralph Thibault of Redwood City, T. D. Thibault of Tionesta and the late Cora Chubbuck.

Mrs. Thibault moved to Tionesta to make her home with her son and his family about four years ago and had been ill only a few weeks having made a trip to Redwood City during January to attend the funeral of her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Ralph Thibault, who was killed in an automobile accident in which three other members of the family were injured. The shock of the latter's sudden death together with the death of her daughter, Mrs. Cora Chubbuck, just a short time later in Sacramento, no doubt hastened the decease of Mrs. Thibault.

The former Hobart Miller is also survived by a sister, Mrs. Albina Malo of San Francisco, and a brother, Phil Longevin of Oakland and was a native of Canada.

The sympathy of a large circle of friends goes to the family which has been so greatly bereaved in the past few weeks.

Registered in the college of arts and science, Mrs. Mapes is majoring in botany and Spanish. She graduated from Reno high school where she achieved an outstanding record in her studies.

by LYTLE HULL

In a very touching interview in a New York paper, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—as he is affectionately known to us all—recently told of the joys and sorrows attendant upon the arrival of the mail at some faraway station or for some home-sick crew on naval patrol. Lieutenant Fairbanks, of the United States Navy, had just returned from duty "somewhere at sea" and spoke feelingly to mothers, wives and friends of men who are serving their country in these distant—and often lonely—stations. He told a moving story of the happiness of those whose names were called when the mail arrived—and a distressing tale of the poor home-sick kids who waited until the last letter had been handed out—only to turn away empty-handed with a sob in their throats.

The writer was so impressed by the interview that he wrote a letter asking for an answer which he might reproduce in this column. Here it is:

Dera Lytle:

Your very interesting letter arrived and nothing would please me more than to give you what material I can for a column on "letters to the boys."

The mail problem is a real and serious one. The boys serving in these bleak and desolate outposts receive every attention and consideration with a nation at war can give them. Their health and welfare is supervised by experts and their training the best available. But, too often, the strictly personal and intimate stimulant is missing—and this can only come from "the folks back home." In this war, great units in the front line spend long periods of inactivity, and action is intermittent—violent and complete when it comes. The issues at stake this time are greater than at any other period in the world's history, and the war takes on a sort of "Holy Crusade" appearance. Consequently, the men need at all time to feel that the home front is carrying on. Oevr and above this they want homely contacts—they feel so far away—so isolated—they starve for details of every bit of home news.

One young lad I know was without mail for several weeks .Finally he received news that he was the father of a baby girl. This man had an added incentive for doing his job. Others get news of much less importance but it means almost as much to them. None of the services are "professional" in the old military sense—despite the fact that many are Regulars. They are all citizens—they are all very home-minded. When a mail ship comes in to a post away from home the first question which teh signal lights blink out is "have you any mail for us?" If there is, the ship's work is done with added vigor, and spirits soar.

These men are doing a job of work—that it is in their line of duty and must be done goes without saying. We take it for granted that they should make sacrifices—which is as it should be—but we can help them to do their job by letting them know we are thinking of them and "keeping the home fires burning." And dear Lytle, if your column can help in getting this thought across to their families and friends, it will be a great thing.

As ever,
Doug.

13,204 NEWSPAPERS

* * * * *

This newspaper is one of 13,204 newspapers which are published in the United States. In addition, there are 5,709 magazines and other periodicals, bringing the total publications of all kinds to almost 20,000.

To read all of the material which is printed in one week would take any one individual a good number of lifetimes. But the interesting thing about America's publications is that each one is published to fulfill a definite desire of a specific group of people.

There is a different magazine to discuss the problems of each line of business. There is a magazine to atisfy the requirements of every type of literary taste. There are magazines to aid you with hobbies, with housework, with domestic problems and with the care of children.

The reason so many newspapers are necessary is because people are primarily interested in local news, Th big dailies report the news events of the whole world, but even in these days of war an analysis of any daily shows column after column devoted to the news of the particular city in which it is published. A Chicagoan cannot hope to enjoy reading a New York newspaper as much as he does one of his local city papers which report what is happening in his home city.

To fulfill the demand for local news is the sole reason for the publication of the Sierra Sun and for the publication of weekly or semi-weekly newspapers in 10,000 communities throughout the nation.

Of all the thousands of publications there are, none but one published in Truckee is concerned with our local activities. As one community publisher says in his masthead, "This is the only newspaper in the world that gives a darn about our town."

So, in spite of the thousands of publications our readers could read each week, we feel that this newspaper gives them something they want which thy could not obtain in any other way.

SPEAKER GARLAND IS CANDIDATE FOR GOVERNOR

Anti-Olson Leader Seeks Showdown With Incumbent

by JOHN W. DUNLAP
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

SACRAMENTO, Mar. 5 —(U.P.)—Gordon H. Garland, Democratic speaker of the state assembly, has entered the race for governor in the August primary.

Garland has ben building up for his candidacy for a good many months. The actual announcement made certain it would be a three-way race for the vital Democratic nomination. State Senator Robert Kenny of Los Angeles already has announced and Governor Culbert L Olson, while not on the record officially, is a cinch to seek re-election. There appears to be no other serious contnders in the immediate horizon.

The Republicans are still sparring with no one actually announced.

Garland is a vigorous man of 43, although hiss now-white hair and calm demeanor might indicate a few more years. He was first elected to the state assembly in 1936 from Tulare and Kings counties, was re-elected in 1938, and then again in 1940 over the opposition of the governor in a famous "purge" campaign.

The candidate is a rancher by occupation and manages his large holdings at Woodlake, Tulare county. He came to California with his parents in 1910, is married, has four daughters and three grandchildren.

Garland first came into prominence in January, 1940, when he joined nine other conservative Democrats in deserting the Olson forces and setting up a bi-partisan "economy bloc" with the Republicans. The Republicans ousted Olsonite Speaker Paul Peek and elected Garland as speaker to hold the coalition and he was re-elected eight times during the regular and special session of the past two years.

Garland has never been a pussy-footer and his outspoken criticism of the Olson administration is his chief stock in trade. He hopes that Kenny and Olson will battle each other for the same bloc of liberal-larbor-left wing Democrats while he tries to snare the conservative members and as many Republicans as possible.

Garland is frank to admit he has a tough battle ahead of him. He comes from a small community that is not generally known to voters, he has been in the headlines for only two years and then cheifly through the legislature and most of all, is running for office in a year when many people won't get excited about state politics, because of the war.

But the new candidate covered a lot of ground in his declaration of candidacy to the press. Most of it was based on a criticism of Olson.

Here was the keynote: "The present state administration cannot escape its record of incompetence bungling and reckless waste of public funds and resources. By its disregard for public welfare and the public will, it ha lost the confidence of our people, and a change is imperative to preserve the unity so necessary to victory."

He followed up his tax reduction stand in the legislature for the duration of the war by advocating complete abolition of the state income tax and substanial lowering of the sales tax.

The need for economy brought a promise of "absolute economy and efficiency," in addition to suspension of all nonessential state building during the emergency, after which a public works reserve could be used to provide employment in the post war period.

He held out to farmers and business that "every facility of government should be extended to help the independent farmer and small business man contribute to the war effort and assure their survival in the economy of the peace to follow."

"There will be no abridgement of the rights of labor under my administration," Garland promised. "Neither will there be any toleration of unscrupulous 'leaders' who seek to exploit the men and women of labor. To realize needed reform within the labor movement, I shall recommend legislation extending to members of organized labor the democratic processes and protction of the secret ballot on issues upon which they may be called to vote within their unions."

Parenthetically, Garlnad voted for the anti-hot cargo act which Olson vetoed and which apepars as a referendum issue on the November ballot.

"No communistic or other un-American influence will be tolerated within my adminstration," Garland continued...."Nor will there be any granting of paroles to convicted murderers because of Communist party pressure or political expediency...."

An innovation was the promise not to seek a second term. He promised support of the Roosevelt administration and advocated measures to remove the threat of sabotage by enemy aliens or others. He urged the quick completion and full development of the Central Valley project. On California in the war, he said the state needs an administration which will inspire industry, agriculture and labor alike to work in harmony.

TAHOE CITY, Mar. 5— James Worden, former ace skier of the Tahoe Ski Club, attended the club's meet on Sunday, making his first appearance on skis since his injury at the Jeffers Cup races in Sun Valley over two years ago.

The whole organization rejoiced over seeing the popular youth on skis again. Jimmy has the name of "having what it takes." Though he fell and was badly hurt, he got up and struggled acorss the finish line before giving up. As the result he was laid up for many months but was not discouraged for one minute and his appearance on the hill Sunday with his sister, Helen, gladdened the hearts of all who know and respect him.

A recent article in Colliers magazine told of Worden's brave finish at Sun Valley in graphic style.

PROGRESS

Progress has relegated to the dusty attic many relics of a thousand yesterdays. The Edison gramaphone of uncertain tone has given way to the electrically controlled radio-phonograph. The confining womens styles of the early 1900s are a far cry from the free, healthier and more attractive products of the present day. And, the old wood and coal stove belongs to an earlier generation. The back-breaking dirty work of getting the fuel, sifting the ashes for "clinkers" and disposing of mountains of wasted fuel in the form of ashes is no longer necessary or economical. Oil heat has relegated this cold weather torture to the land of the dodo bird.

Let us prove to you the advantages of heating with oil. See the attractive designs in oil heating units and investigate the low cost of operation.

A WEEK OF THE WAR

President Roosevelt wrote War Production Chairman Nelson "The months just ahead are the critical months of the war. Victory depends in large measure on the increased war production we are able to get from our factories and arsenals in the spring and summer of 1942...This is total war. We are all under fire—soldiers and civilians alike...We are all belligerents. To win we must fight..."

Chairman Nelson announced a "continuing national drive" has been undertaken "to increase production immediately in plants which now have war contracts and to convert other plants to war production as speedily and as completely as possible." He said the program will entail 168 hours work per week for every machine in war plants, awards for outstanding industrial accomplishment, and establishment of joint labor-management War Plant Committees to consider suggestions "from all quarters" for increased production.

The President, in a radio address said "We Americans have been compelled to yield ground, but we will regain it....Soon, we and not they will make the final peace....Actually we are taking a heavy toll of the enemy every day that goes by. .."

Mr. Roosevelt said "Germany, Italy and Japan are very close to their maximum output of planes, guns, tanks and ships. The United Nations are not—especially the United States of America...." He asked Americans not to stop work "for a single day... until the war is won," not to demand special privileges for any one group and to give up conveniences cheerfully when necessary.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

Under Secretary of State Welles announced two agreements signed with Brazil to strengthen hemispheric solidarity and to provide lend-lease aid to Brazil. Lend-Lease Administrator Stettinius reported lend-lease aid for January reached $462,000,000 and actual shipments have now exceeded two billion dollars.

Allocations for lend-lease purposes totaled more than $12 billion as of February 19.

The U. S. and Britain signed a pact commits both nations to virtually unlimited free trade, and provides final terms of the settlement "shall be such as not to burden commerce between the two countries."

Mr. Welles announced the Vichy French government has given the U. S. assurances it will not aid the the Axis beyond terms of the Armistice agreements.

PRODUCTION AND CONVERSION

The War Production Board said conversion of peace time industrial plants to war production will be "over the hump" by late fall. Complete conversion of the automobile industry is expected by September 1 the board said. The board announced its industry branch heads are determining amounts of each product required for the war effort, preparatory to converting of each industry to war production.

RATIONING

Price Administrator Henderson said national registration for sugar rationing books will be held over a four-day period probably during the last week in March. Approximately 1,400,000 school teachers will serve as registrars and 245,000 schools will be used. One adult may register for each "family unit."

The WPB announced a rationing program beginning March 9 for 196,000 new trucks and truck trailers which will be available for rationing during the next 22 months. The rationing will be administered jointly by the WPB and the Office of Defense transportation. Mr. Henderson said state quotas provide 120,000 new 1942 passenger automobiles for eligible buyers during March, April and May. Total number of cars earmarked for civilian purchase during the next 12 months is 340,000. No passenger car retreaded tires will be available in March, he said.

THE WAR FRONT

The Navy reported U. S. Naval forces sank 53 enemy ships between December 10, 1941, and February 24 1942, probably sank seven more and damaged five additional. The Army announced from December 7 to February 27, it probably sank at least 12 Japanese ships, seriously damaged 31 others, and shot down 245 enemy planes—not including 165 Japanese planes shot down by the American Volunteer Group serving in the Chinese Army. The Navy said in the first two months of this year 116 ships of United Nations registry were attacked in the western half of the Atlantic and 56 attacks were made by the Navy on enemy submarines. Three U-boats are believed sunk and four were believed damaged.

General MacArthur's troops attacked enemy lines in the Philippines and advanced one to five miles all along the front. Two more U. S. tankers were torpedoed off the Atlantic coast

Congress completed action on the new $32 billion appropriation bill providing more than $23 billion for the Army, five billion dollars for Lend-Lease and the remainder for expansion of the merchant marine The President by Executive Order reorganized the Army to speed up and coordinate military action. The President set up three basic units under the Army chief of staff, for ground forces, air forces ,and "services of supply"—each with its own commanding general.

The House passed legislation increasing from one month to one year the payment of dependents of the salaries of members of the armed forces captured by the enemy. The legislation would also increase the pay of officers and men serving outside continental U. S. by from 10 to 20 per cent. The President established the Army Specialists Corps, a unit of uniformed civilian employees who may be appointed to War Department positions regardless of Civil Service status. War Secretary Stimson announced soldiers are no longer required to obtain permission before they can be married. He said men with dependents may enlist or reenlist if they sign a statement that their dependents have sufficient means of outside support.

COMMISSIONS FOR MEN WITH DEPENDENTS

The Army announced a new policy by which men with dependents may enlist for the sole purpose of qualifying as officers, and if they fail to make the grade may be transferred to the enlisted reserves. They would not then be called for active service until thier previous classifications in the draft were changed. Age limits are 18 to 45. All candidates must serve four months in replacement centers or field units before being eligible for officers candidates school The new policy is designed to meet Army needs this year of 75,000 new officers selected from 95,000 candidates

SELECTIVE SERVICE

Selective Service Director Hershey reported the third national lottery to determine order numbers for February 16 registrants will be held in Washington March 17, but new registrants probably will not be called before May.

CHAPTER 7

"Make 'em dolce. Make 'em nice, sweet, no loud at all. No big dramatic. Nice, a sweet, a sad. Yeah?' Parma begged.

"I'll do my best," Leonard said.

"You do like I say, we knock 'em over."

So we went out there and got through the gingerbread, and he threw down his pen and I threw down my paint brush, and we got out of the props, and the orchestra played the introduction to the duet Then he started to sing, and I woke up. I mean, I got it through my head that when that bird said dolce he meant dolce. He sang as though that bonnet of Mimi's were some little bird he had in his hand, so it made a catch come in your throat to listen to him. When he hit the A, he lifted his eyes, with the side of his face to the audience, and held it a little, and then melted off it almost with a sigh. When he did that he looked at me and winked.

It was that wink that told me what I had to do. I had to put dolce in it. I came in on my beat and tried to do it as he did it. When it came to my little solo, I put tears in it. Maybe they were just imitation tears, but they were tears.

We went into the finish and laid it right on the end of Mario's stick and slopped out the tears in buckets. Buckets? We turned the fire hose on them. It stopped the show. They didn't only clap—they cheered; so we had to repeat it. That's dead against the rules and Mario tried to go on but they wouldn't let him. We got through he act and Parma flopped on the bed for the last two "Mimi's" and the curtain came down to a terrific hand. We took our first two bows, the whole gang that were in the act, and when we came back from the second one Mario was back there. Cecil yelled in my ear. "Take him out, take him out!" So I took him out. I grabbed him by one hand she by the other, and we led him out and they gave him a big hand, too. That seemed to fix it up about that missed cue....

It was a half-houru before I could start to dress. I went to my dressing room and had just about got my whiskers pulled off, when about fifty people shoved in from outside, wanting me to autograph their programs I obliged and signed "Logan Bennett." Then I washed up and met Cecil and we got a cab and went out to eat.

We went to a nightc lub. It had a dance floor, and tables around that and booths around the wall. We took a booth. We ordered a steak for two and then she ordered some red burgundy to go with it and sherry to start. That was unusual with her. She's like mot singers. She'll give you a drink, but she doesn't take much herself. She saw me look at her. "I want something. I—want to celebrate."

"O. K. with me. Plenty all right."

"Did you enjoy yourself?"

"I enjoyed the final curtain."

"Didn't you enjoy the applause after the O Mimi duet? It brought down the house."

"It was all right."

"Is that all you have to say about it?"

"I liked it fine."

"You mean you really liked it?"

"Yeah, but I hate to admit it, but I really liked it. That was the prettiest music I heard all night."

The sherry came and we raised our glasses, clinked and had a sip. "Leonard, I love it."

"You're better at it than in concert."

"You're telling me? I hate concerts. But opera—I just love it, and if you ever hear me saying again that I dont' want to be a singer, you'll know I'm temporarily insane. I love it; I love everything about it, the smell, the fights, the high notes, the low notes, the applause, the curtain calls—everything."

"You must feel good tonight."

"I do. Do you?"

"I feel all right."

"Is it—the way you thought it would be?"

"I never thought."

"Not even—just a little bit?"

"You mean, that it's nice, and silly and cockeyed, that I should be here with you and that I should be an opera singer, when all God intended me for was a dumb contractor, and that it's a big joke that came off just the way you hoped it would, and—something like that?"

"Yes, that's what I mean."

"Then, yes."

"Let's dance."

We danced and I held her close and smelled her hair, and she nestled it up against my face. "It's gay, isn't it?"

"Yes."

"I'm almost happy, Leonard."

"Me, too."

"Let's go back to our little booth I want to be kissed."

So we went back to the booth and she got kissed, and we laughed about the way I hid from Mario, and drank wine and ate steak. I had to cut the steak left handed, so I wouldn't joggle her head, where it seemed to be parked on my right shoulder....

We stayed a second week in Chicago and I did my three operas over again, and then we played a week in Cleveland and another in Indianapolis. Then Cecil's contract was up, and it was time for her to go back and get ready for the New York season.

The Saturday matinee in Indianapolis was "Faust." I met Cecil in the main dining-room that morning around ten o'clock, for breakfast, and, while we were eating, Rossi came over and sat down. He didn't have much to say. He kept asking the waiter if any call had come for him and bit his fingernails, and pretty soon it came out that the guy who was to sing Wagner that afternoon wouldn't come to the theater on account of a writ his wife would serve on him if he showed up there and that Rossi was waiting to find out if some singer in Chicago could come down and do it. His call came through, and when he came back he said his man was tied up. That meant somebody from the chorus would have to do it, and that wasn't so good.

And then Cecil popped out: "Well what are we talking about, with him sitting here? Here, baby; here's my key. There's a score up in my room. You can just hike yourself up there and learn it."

"What? Learn it in one morning and then sing it?"

"There are only a few pages of it," Cecil said.

"Faust is in French, isn't it?" I said, hopelessly.

"Oh, dear. He doesn't sing French."

But Rossi fixed that part up. He had a score in Italian and I was to learn it in that and sing it in that, with the rest of them singing French. So the next thing I knew I was up there in my room with a score, and by one o'clock I had it learned; and by two o'clock Rossi had given me the business, and by three o'clock I was in a costume they dug up, out there doing it.

That made more impression on them than anything I had done yet. You see, they don't pay much attention to a guy who knows three roles all coached by heart They know all about them. But a guy who can get a role up quick and go out there and do it, even if he makes a few mistakes. that guy can really be some use around an opera company.

Rossi came to my dressing room after I finished in "Traviata" that night and offered me a contract for the rest of the season. He said Mr Mario was very much pleased with me, espcially the way I had gone in on Wagner. He offered me $150 a week. I thanked him and said no He came up to $175. I still said no He came up to $200. I still said no nda asked him not to bid any higher, as it wasn't a question of money. He couldn't figure it out, but after a while we shook hands and that was that.

That night Cecil and I ate in a quiet little place we had found where we were practically the only customers. After we ordered she said, "Did Rossi speak to you?"

"Yes, he did."

"Did he offer $150? He said he would."

"He came up to $200."

"I said no."

"Why?"

"Why?"

"I'm no singer What would I be doing trailing around with this outfit after you're gone?"

"They play Baltimore, Philadelphia, Boston and Pittsburgh before they swing west. I could visit you weekends, maybe oftener than that. I—I might even make a flying trip out to the coast"

"I'm not the type."

"Who is the type?....Leonard, let me ask you something. Is it just because his $200 a week looks like chicken-feed to you? Is it because a big contractor makes a lot more than that?"

"Sometimes he does. Right now he doesn't make a dime."

"If that's what it is, you're making a mistake. Leonard, everything has come out the way I said i would, hasn't it? Now, listen to me. With that voice, you can make money that a big contractor never heard of. After just one season with the American Scala Opera Company, the Metropolitan will grab you sure. It isn't everybody who can sing with the American Scala. Their standards are terribly high, and very well the Metropolitan knows it. Once you're in the Metropolitan, there's the radio the phonograph, concert, moving pictures. Leonard, you can be rich. You—you can't help it."

"Contracting is my trade."

"All this—doesn't it mean anything to you?"

"Yeah, for a gag. But not what you mean."

"And, in addition to the money, there's fame—"

"Don't want it."

She sat there and I saw her eyes begin to look wet. Then she said, "Oh why don't we both tell the truth? You want to get back to New York—for what's waiting for you in New York. And I—I don't want you ever to go there again."

"No. That's not it."

"Yes, it is....I'm doing just exactly the opposite of what I thought I was doing when we started all this. I thought I would be the good fairy and bring you and her together again. And now, what am I doing? I'm just a—home-wrecker."

She looked comic as she said it, and I laughed and she laughed. Then she started to cry. I hadn't heard one word from Doris since I left New York. I had wired her from every hotel I had stopped at and you would think she might have sent me a post card. There wasn't even that. I sat there, waching Cecil and trying to let her be a home-wrecker, as she called it. I knew she was swell; I respected everything about her; I didn't have to be told she'd do anything for me. I tried to feel I was in love with her so I could say let's both stay with this outfit and let the rest go hang. I couldn't. And then the next thing I knew I was crying, too.....

We hit New York Monday morning I put Cecil in a cab and went on home. On the way, I kept thinking what I was going to say. I had been away six weeks, and what had kept me that long? The best I could think of was that I had taken a swing around to look at "conditions."

When I got home I let myself in carried in my grip, and called to Doris. There was no answer. I went out in the kitchen, and it was empty There wasn't a soul in the house.

Life Span Of Cable Railway Ends As Prey Of Progress In San Francisco Feb. 15

SAN FRANCISCO, Mar. 5 (RNS)—SACRAMENTO STREET CABLE RAILWAY

Born—June 23, 1873

Died—February 15, 1942

Thus, afer nearly completing man's alloted span of three score years and ten, another of San Francisco's links with its early years has fallen prey to progress. Modern buses have superseded those little gren cars that scooted from the Ferry up the steep side of Nob Hill, down the other side into "Polk Gulch", up again beyond Van Ness avenue, down again into Fillmore valley, finally winding up at Presidio avenue. Only six cable lines remain in San Francisco.

SNOWBIRDS OF CANADA

Passed by Censor

FROM the young men who used to spend their winter weekends skiing on the snow-covered hills of Canada, the Dominion has created a body of ski troops who are second to none. Long experience in this popular sport made it easy for these men to adapt themselves to the conversion of skiing from a pastime to the sterner purposes of war. Already they have proved their value in Iceland and many thousands of them are ready to demonstrate their merits in other theatres of war if necessary. The photographs show a platoon of ski troops on manoeuvres and a sniper who would be very difficult to spot.

SPECIMENS FROM AFAR MAKE MACKAY MINING SCHOOL MUSEUM ONE OF THE FINEST OF ITS TYPE IN NATION

From all parts of Nevada and from remote corners of the world, gifts stream steadily into the Mackay School of Mines museum on the University of Nevada campus.

Mineral specimens, fossils, rare maps and papers, old mining implements are among the finds with whic hfriends of the school steadily augment the huge collection of material which comprises one of the best museums of its kind to be found anywhere.

During the past two years, 119 seperate gifts have been made, according to Prof. Walter S. Palmer, curator. Many of them consist of several items, making a total of approximately 150 individual specimens which have been added to the estimated 30,000 pieces now in the museum cases.

Growing steadly in the 34 years since its founding, the museum now occupies space on three floors of the mines building.

While most of the accessions have come from mines and out-croppings of Nevada itself, a sizeable portion are of out-of-state origin.

Among the states and foreign land represented in the past two years' gifts are Illinois, California, Idaho Wyoming, Utah, Washington, Pennsylvania, Canada, Alasaka, Hawaiian Islands, Fiji Islnds, China, Southern Rhodesia, Philippine Islands and Chile.

Unusual acquistions in the two-year period include a specimen of pitchblende (radium ore) from Great Bear Lake in Canada, mastadon tusks from Alaska, the first piece of copper ore found by the late Frank Hunt in sinking his Rio Tinto shaft in 1919, a sample of the first metallic nickel produced in Nevada, an old hammer from a Philippine Island gold mine that was operated during the Spanish days more than 200 years ago, platinum ore from Southern Rhodesia in Africa, and a rare early-day drawing of the famous prehistoric footprines in the state prisor yard at Carson City.

Odds of all, perhaps, is a chunk of rock containing a vein of white quartz which forms a nearly perfect letter "N" about four inches tall and three inches wide. It was found 25 miles north of Reno on the Red Red Rock road by A. F. Grafenstein of Reno.

Many of the gifts from faraway were made by Mackay school of mines graduates who have carried an affection for their alma mater with them to out-of-the-way places in all parts of the world.

Typical of these is the Philippine Islands hammer, which was presented to the museum, together with free gold and free silver ore, by the late Wallace Coltrin, formerly of Sebastopol, Calif., a Mackay graduate of 1928. He found the material deep in an old mine shaft. Nearby were found rare Spanish coins over 200 years old, indicating that Spaniards had worked the mines in the early part of the 18th century.

Coltrin was killed in an accident while engaged in work for the U. S Army shortly before the war broke out in December.

Appreciation of the generosity and thoughtfulness of former students and other friends of the university in presentin gthe exhibits was expressed by Professor Palmer.

"We are always pleased to receive new material," he said.
